President's Letter

Happy New Year, welcome to 2022! As we continue to find our way through these challenging times of Covid, Prairie Area Reading Council would like to provide professional development that is safe and also fun. So Kathleen March will be presenting her annual Book Gossip presentation virtually. We hope that you can join us on February 3 at 6:00 pm.

How are you taking advantage of your membership in PARC/IRC? Have you participated in a Wired Wednesday Webinar recently? If not, please join us on March 2, 2022 to listen to M. Colleen Cruz when she discusses how to transform students' writing. IRC next book club will be starting January 23, 2022. You can read Passionate Readers: The Art of Reaching and Engaging Every Child by Pernille Ripp and/or Welcome to Writing Workshop: Engaging Today's Students with a Model That Works by Stacey Shubitz and Lynne R. Dorfman. These seven-week online discussions will help you learn the five keys to creating a passionate reading environment or how to create a thriving writing workshop. Participants who complete all assignments will be eligible to receive 15 PD clock hours for each book club. Participants who complete one book club during the winter will have the opportunity to participate in the other one during the spring session.

We hope that you will join us for some of these events.

Happy Reading,
Sherry Sejnost

Winter Spotlight

Hello amazing educators!

This year has had so many ups and downs no matter what role you play in the education system. One thing that we know is that it is essential for our students to have healthy SEL habits. While perusing articles on Edutopia, I stumbled across the article, 3 SEL Practices that Early Childhood Educators Can Use Everyday. They went through several ideas that, in my opinion, would be beneficial to read for educators or all ages.

We often hear about elementary classrooms having class meetings. This is one of the welcoming Inclusion activities mentioned in the article. Older classrooms could have quick morning check-ins instead. One of the tools suggested to help discuss emotions was a mood meter. One of my teacher friends uses this at her school with K-5 and it has been successful! I have done an activity with 3rd graders in Google Slides taking the mood meter and breaking it down for students to add corresponding colors. It was a day of powerful small group discussions.

Veteran teachers are usually pros at anticipating when students will need a break in learning. With our littles it is easy to see (or hear) when they are starting to get squirrely! One of the tools suggested in the article, and also one I have experience with is GoNoodle. I have had success using this virtually and in person to give my kiddos a movement break or to provide a structure for a breathing exercise. I'll be honest - it is a good way for me to add movement for myself as well. The section this is mentioned in is about engaging strategies. The author suggests restoration with something like breathing exercises and a safe place to express feelings once we are able to re-engage our learners.

The last section of the article was called Optimistic Closure. One example the author gave was to practice gratitude by asking students to share someone or something that brought them joy that day. I loved this simple idea and connected to it since I often ask my daughter one question when she comes home from school, "What happened today that made you smile?" It bonds us, just as this activity could do in your learning space.

I hope that these quick tidbits help you in a small way and that you are able to find joy in your day today.

Happy New Year! We are holding steady at about 78 members in PARC.

Welcome new members this fall: Angela Sobotka, Sienna Godfrey, Dr. Kevin Marcano, Betty Grimaldo, Kara Harmon, Jill Albrecht-Cucchi, Katy Boehm, and Katie Russell.

We thank our several renewing members too!

It would be excellent if we push past 80 members in the next month. Make it your resolution to recruit a friend, colleague, or mentee to become a member of PARC. Here is the link to join or renew.
